Chapter 1 Outline

This chapter explains the outline of FJQSS (Information Collection Tool).

1.1 FJQSS (Information Collection Tool)

This appendix explains FJQSS (Information Collection Tool) that archives the information for investigation (middleware logs and operation system logs) with an easy operation. Executing FJQSS right after a problem occurs makes a rapid investigating of the causes.

Chapter 2 Collecting the information

This chapter explains the method of gathering the survey material, the confirm method of the survey material, and notes.

2.1 Collection method

This section explains the operating procedure of FJQSS (Information Collection Tool).

Collecting information can do by using the command. You can operate the Collection by the method that shows the product selection menu, or the method that does not show such the menu.

- 2.1.1 Collecting with showing menu
- 2.1.2 Collecting without showing menu

2.1.1 Collecting with showing menu

This subsection explains the operating procedure of FJQSS (Information Collection Tool) with showing the product selection menu.

Authority to execute

User Authority of the root user is necessary.

Prior confirmation

Set the output directory of the collected information if necessary. The output directory of default is the /var/tmp directory on Solaris, or the /tmp directory on Linux. See [2.3 Changing a path of the output directory] for details of changing the output directory.

Synopsis

If you execute the command specifying the output directory by the parameter:

```
fjqss_collect output_directory

If you execute the command specifying the output directory by the environment variable or the environmental configuration file:

fjqss_collect

Path to this command

```
/opt/FJSVqstl

Notes in executing the command

- Do not put fjqss_collect or its copy into any other directory. They work only if they are in the path shown above in [Path to this command].
- Execute this command immediately after the problem occurs.
- Multiple execution of this command is not available. If you do that, the following error message appears:

FJQSS is already started. Please restart FJQSS after the executing one ends.

Operating procedure

This part explains the operating procedure of FJQSS (Information Collection Tool).

1. Log on to the server, open the console window and execute the information collection command in the console window.

   Hereafter, it explains by the example when outputting the information to the default output directory:

> cd /opt/FJSVqstl
> ./fjqss_collect

2. The product selection menu appears. It shows the list of the products whose information can be collected.
3. Put the number of the product of which you want to collect the information:

-----------------------------------------------------
FJQSS Product Selection
-----------------------------------------------------
  1.MW Product B (Server Side)
  2.MW Product B (Client Side)

Please input a number of the product of which you want to collect the information.>>1

4. Check the indicated name(s) of the middleware (s) whose investigation information are to be collected, then press the [Y] key to start.

   Collection starts and the following indicator appear in the command prompt:

The following product information is collected.
        MW Product B (Server Side)

Input 'Y-key' to collect data, or 'N-key' to stop.(default=N):y
preparing:            ######################################## 100% [00:01]

   The time and the disk space required for the collection depend on the condition of the target system.

5. Check the contents of the output directory.

   After the FJQSS (Information Collection Tool) has completed the collection, the following prompt appears. Verify that the information have been collected in the directory whose name is indicated in the prompt:

The following product information is collected.
        MW Product B (Server Side)

Input 'Y-key' to collect data, or 'N-key' to stop.(default=N):y
preparing:            ######################################## 100% [00:01]
collecting:           ######################################## 100% [00:01] archiving:            ######################################## 100% [00:01] compress:             ######################################## 100% [00:15] Completed.
Gathered investigation informations archived to /tmp/ezcollect20121018172939/result20121018172939.tar.gz(206KB)

   This is an example on Linux.

   The gathered investigation informations are archived to /var/tmp/⋯ directory on Solaris, or /tmp/⋯ directory in Linux.

   The following files are created in the output directory (ezcollectYYYYMMDDHHMMSS: YYYYMMDDHHMMSS indicates the time (year, month, day, hours, minutes and seconds) that the collection started). See [2.2 Checking the collected information] for the output directory:

- resultYYYYMMDDHHMMSS.tar.gz

  The collected information.

- result.txt

  The result log is a text file to indicate if the collection of information has succeeded.

  This file indicates the names and the results of collection (OK/NG) of each material.

- ez.log

  The activity log of the FJQSS (Information Collection Tool).

Aborting FJQSS (Information Collection Tool)

This subsection explains how to abort running FJQSS (Information Collection Tool).

Although it is recommended that you wait until the collection ends, you can press [CTRL] + [C] key combination to abort the execution if it is necessary. The following prompt appears if [CTRL] + [C] is pressed and the execution is aborted.

The following product information is collected.
        MW Product B (Server Side)

Input 'Y-key' to collect data, or 'N-key' to stop.(default=N):y
preparing:            ################## 40% [00:01]
Stopped FJQSS process.

The output directory that has been made in the collecting might remain when the executing is aborted. There is no influence in the operation of FJQSS because the output directory will be newly made when FJQSS is executed again.

Moreover, there is no influence in the operation of FJQSS even if the remaining output directory was deleted.

Note

Do not close the command prompt before the collection ends. if you do so, the temporary directories might remain in the work directory. Please delete the following directories if they remain in the work directory.

・ezcollectYYYYMMDDHHMMSS

・ezworkYYYYMMDDHHMMSS

See 2.3 Changing a path of the output directory] for details of the work directory.

2.1.2 Collecting without showing menu

This subsection explains the operating procedure of FJQSS (Information Collection Tool) without showing the product selection menu.

You can use the procedure in the shell script.

Authority to execute

User Authority of the root user is necessary.

Prior confirmation

Verify the product identification name of the product of which you collect the information by the product information showing command. See 2.1.3 Getting the product identification name] for details.

Set the output directory of the collected information if necessary. The output directory of default is the /var/tmp directory on Solaris, or the /tmp directory on Linux. See [2.3 Changing a path of the output directory] for details of changing the output directory.

Synopsis

The specification of product identification name by "-pr <product identification name>" is necessary if you specify the silent mode option by "-s".

If you execute the command specifying the output directory by the parameter:

fjqss_collect -pr <product identification name> [-s] output_directory

If you execute the command specifying the output directory by the environment variable or the environmental configuration file:

fjqss_collect -pr <product identification name> [-s]

Description

The fjqss_collect command collects the information required for the investigation.

Option

-pr

This option specifies the product identification name of the product of which you collect the information.

-s

The command runs without asking to the operator. (It runs in silent mode.)

Path to this command

/opt/FJSVqstl

Notes in executing the command

- Do not put fjqss_collect or its copy into any other directory. They work only if they are in the path shown above in [Path to this command].
- Execute this command immediately after the problem occurs.
- Multiple execution of this command is not available. If you do that, the following error message appears:

FJQSS is already started. Please restart FJQSS after the executing one ends.

2.1.3 Getting the product identification name

This subsection explains how to get the product identification name which you specify when collecting the information without showing Product Selection Menu.

The product identification name can be got by executing the product information showing command.

Authority to execute

User Authority of the root user is necessary.

Synopsis

fjqss_mwpinfolist

Description

This command shows the list of the information of products of which the information collection is available.

Each product's information is shown in one line.

The product's Information is shown in order of "No." (number), "KEY" (product identification name), "DispName" (product name) and "Path" (destination directory of the information)

Example of the result of executing the product information showing command:

MW Product List
No. KEY        DispName                Path
--------------------------------------------------------------------------------
1.  PRODUCTA  MW PRODUCT A            /opt/FJSVPRDA/server/fjqss_tool1
2.  PRODUCTB  MW PRODUCT B            /opt/FJSVPRDB/server/fjqss_tool1
3.  PRODUCTC  MW PRODUCT C            /opt/FJSVPRDC/server/fjqss_tool1

If you collect the information of the product No.1, specify the product identification name "PRODUCTA" as the parameter to collect the information of the "MW PRODUCT A" by the procedure of 2.1.2 Collecting without showing menu].

Path to this command

/opt/FJSVqstl

2.2 Checking the collected information

The collected information are created in the output directory (ezcollectYYYYMMDDHHMMSS) as file "resultYYYYMMDDHHMMSS.tar.gz".

The output directory is created at the output specified for an environmental configuration file destination at the output destination. If no destination is specified, then the output directory is created at the /var/tmp directory on Solaris, or the /tmp directory on LInux.

You can specify a path of the output directory if you execute the information collecting command in the console window. See [2.3 Changing a path of the output directory].for details of the environmental configuration file ant the output destination.

Verify that the following file and directory exist:

- Result log (result.txt)

  The result log is a text file to indicate if the collection of information has succeeded.

  This file indicates the names and the results of collection (OK/NG) of each material.

- Collected information (resultYYYYMMDDHHMMSS.tar.gz)

Note

Collected information (resultYYYYMMDDHHMMSS.tar.gz) is compressed and archived by gzip and tar. Collected information contains the following files.

- resultdir

  This directory contains the collected files.

- result.txt

  The result log is a text file to indicate if the collection of information has succeeded.

  This file indicates the names and the results of collection (OK/NG) of each material.

- ez.log

  The activity log of the FJQSS (Information Collection Tool).

- convert.txt

  If the file path name of information collecting is too long and information collecting can't get in former file name, file path name is converted and gathered. Former file path name and Converted file path name are output to convert.txt.convert.txt is output in the form of the following.

  Output form

  <Former file path name>,<Converted file path name> convert.txt is output when there was only information collecting for which the conversion of the file path name was necessary.

2.3 Changing a path of the output directory

You can change a path of the output directory by two methods below.

- Specifying a path of the output directory in the option of the information collecting command.
- Specifying a path of the output directory by setting the environment variable.
- Specifying a path of the output directory by updating the environmental configuration file.

The method of specifying in the option of the command explains in 2.1.1 Collecting with showing menu and 2.1.2 Collecting without showing menu]. Hereafter, the method of specifying by the environment variable and by the environmental configuration file will be explained.

Specifying a path of the output directory by setting the environment variable

You can specify the directory where the output directory will be created by setting the environment variable EZ_OUTPUTDIR before executing this command.

Description format:

EZ_OUTPUTDIR="the directory path where the output directory will be created"
export EZ_OUTPUTDIR

Example:

If “/etc/work” is specified to %EZ_OUTPUTDIR%:

EZ_OUTPUTDIR=/etc/work
export EZ_OUTPUTDIR

Then the directory below will be created as the output directory:

```
/etc/work/ezcollectYYYYMMDDHHMMSS

Specifying a path of the output directory by updating the environmental configuration file

Environmental configuration file (FJQSSconf.txt) is a file that defines the operating environment of FJQSS.

It exists in following directory.

<Directory where the product is installed>/fjqss_tooln (n=1,2,..,9)

The items that can be specified for environmental configuration file are shown below.

Item	Outline	Omission
OutputDir	The directory path where the output directory will be created (*3).	Possible (*2)
WorkDir	The directory path where the work directory (*1) will be created by FJQSS execution (*3).	Possible(*2)

(*1)The work directory is a directory that temporarily stores information necessary for the execution of FJQSS. When FJQSS ends, stored information is automatically deleted.

(*2) If the specification is wrong or omitted, the /var/tmp directory (on Solaris), or the /tmp directory (on Linux) is used.

(*3) You can specify the directory by the relative path from an absolute path or environmental configuration file.

Description format:

OutputDir="the directory path where the output directory will be created"
WorkDir=” work directory”

Example:

If “/etc/work” is specified to OutputDir, “/etc/tmp” is specified to WorkDIr.

OutputDir=/etc/work
WorkDir=/etc/tmp

Then the directory below will be created as the output directory:

```
/etc/work/ezcollectYYYYMMDDHHMMSS

And the directory below will be created as the work directory:

```
/etc/tmp/ezworkYYYMMDDHHMMSS

Note

If the plural specifications of the output directory is done, then the specification becomes effective in the following order by priority:

1. Specification in the option of the information collecting command.
2. Specification by setting the environment variable.
3. Specification by updating the environmental configuration file.
